Important Guidelines and protocols to be followed cargo release using the correct type of bill of lading - for seller/buyers' perspective.

Many Shippers/Lines have either lost their cargo or their money due to cargo being released at destination to someone other than the legitimate consignee. Wrongful release is a reality, and this could happen to anyone if proper safeguards in terms of documentation is not followed. Such releases may not always be due to the fault of the shipping line (as widely considered) or that proper release protocol has not been followed (although this also happens) by the destination agent.

A lot of these issues could be due to the improper consigning of the bill of lading or the type of bill of lading that is released.

Let us consider some of the scenarios where shippers fail to safeguard cargo release and themselves.

- 1.) Issuing a Straight Bill of Lading on a first-time trade showing the buyer as the consignee without receiving the payment for the cargo in full
- 2.) Issuing a Sea Waybill of Lading showing the buyer as the consignee when the trust between seller and buyer has not been fully established.
- 3.) Issuing instructions to the line to issue Telex Release without first receiving the payment for the cargo in full

1. Risk of issuing a Straight Bill of Lading (when the bill of lading is issued in Original, but consigned to a company or individual): -

A Straight Bill of Ladings may not be as straight as imagined because of the considerable differences between various legal jurisdictions when it comes to its legal identity.

For example, the US COGSA does not require the presentation of the original straight bill of lading for release of cargo whereas certain Scandinavian and Chinese jurisdictions require same. UK COGSA has also been shown to be fickle in this aspect.

Moral of the story: If you are embarking on a first-time trade with the buyer and you as the seller haven't received your payment in full then DO NOT issue a Straight Bill of Lading

2. Risk of issuing a Sea Waybill of Lading (when there are no originals issued and consigned to a company or individual) which is usually issued.

1. For intercompany shipments like from (A) logistic solution India to (b) logistic solution in the Middle East.
 2. Where the shipment takes place between two different companies but there are no negotiations required between the two either directly or via bank for release of the cargo and
 3. The shipper does not need to submit an original B/L to anyone to secure his payment.
- Since no originals are issued in the case of a Sea Waybill, no surrender is required, and the consignee can secure cargo without presentation of any original bill of lading.

Moral of the story: on a first-time trade with the buyer or you as the seller are yet to develop the required level of trust with your buyer, then DO NOT issue a Sea Waybill of Lading.

3. Risk of instructing the line to issue Telex Release instruction to the discharge port agent (when original bills of lading are issued but surrendered by the shipper generally at the POL).

Telex Release is a message that is sent by the shipping line or agent at load port to their office or agent at discharge port advising that the shipper or exporter has surrendered one or all of the original bills of lading that have been issued to them, and that the cargo can be released to the consignee shown on the bill of lading without presentation of any original bills of lading.

There are cases where the seller has not even collected the original bill of lading from the shipping line and has no intention to collect the originals but asked the shipping line to issue telex release instructions to the discharge port agent.

This is risky behavior because once the telex release instructions have been given and actioned, it may be difficult and tricky to recall or stop a telex release once it is issued.

Moral of the story: If you are embarking on a first-time trade with the buyer or you as the seller are yet to develop the required level of trust with your buyer, don't be in a rush and ask the shipping line to issue telex release to release cargo to consignee.

So, what then is the correct type of bill of lading to issue for the seller or shipper to safeguard cargo release?? The answer is a NEGOTIABLE (or ORDER) BILL OF LADING

When a B/L is issued in Original and consigned "TO ORDER" or "TO ORDER OF SHIPPER" or "TO ORDER OF XYZ BANK" it is termed as "Negotiable B/L or Order Bill "

Cargo covered under a negotiable or order bill maybe released by the Destination port agent only after at least 1 of the issued originals are surrendered and after checking the endorsements on the Bill of Lading, as it is possible for this type of B/L to be endorsed or transferred to another company.

In conversation with Devendra Rao, General Manager, Transworld Shipping Trading & Logistics LLC, Transworld Group

This month, the TransView team had a candid chat with Mr. Devendra Rao, General Manager, Transworld Shipping LLC, Transworld Group shared his experiences in Transworld and shipping industry in general. Below are the excerpts from our conversation.

Mr. Devendra Rao, General Manager, Transworld Shipping Trading & Logistics LLC was born and brought up in Mumbai where he started his career in Shipping Industry in the year 2004 with Maersk A.P Moller group. He has completed his post-Graduation in Master of International Business in Mumbai where he desired to fulfill a career in Supply Chain Management. Shipping & Logistics being one of the integral parts of whole Supply Chain Management appeared quite fascinating during the early 2000 as it was still in the nascent stage of adopting E-Commerce and technological advancement in all the departments of industry.

Being associated with the Transworld Group from the last four years and heading overall operations for Transworld Oman has been nothing less than a new learning experience. Cross cultural marketing skills have been handy and fruitful in dealing with different kind of people in all section of business in this part of world. Apart from heading one of the groups strategic division which is completing 20 long years depicts the strong foothold of Transworld Group in Middle East.

Though we continue growing in this sector, he personally feels we should strive for more in coming years despite of various challenges. He personally stands for honesty, transparency, accountability, and respect all at any given point of time. Mr. Devendra believes, with unprecedented changes occurring nothing can be compromised with our core values which keeps us ahead in conducting ourselves and our business appropriately.

He firmly believes that there is a bright future of shipping and logistics and the same is full of adaptation of digitization, new markets, new technology and above new business models. Business models and products will be obsolete in short span of time due to constant changes globally due to consumer demands and human behavior. Pandemics/ shifting of global powers/ changes in manufacturing sectors/ technological breakthroughs and above all consumer demands will generate new opportunities in the logistics sector globally.

On personal note he loves travelling and exploring new places however this pandemic has put this to a back seat. During his spare time, he usually plays brain boosting games, chess, badminton and cycling with his family. He believes that the younger generation should learn and adapt new technologies which would drive the business. Upward learning curve would determine the success path towards their personal and organization growth.

Transworld Group extended support to India's fight against corona during the second wave of pandemic in the country.
